

I am specifically concerned about the channel options presented to me as a cable television subscriber. Out of the 60 plus channels my family receives, we occasionally watch no more than 10-12. We don't care a plug nickel for the rest of them. What we want to watch we either cannot get because it is not an option (e.g. Turner South for Braves Baseball), or it cost too much to add (e.g. premium channels). I had rather spend my money paying for what I want to watch rather than carrying what I do not want to watch. Most of what we presently receive is too laden with commercials every five minutes to relax and enjoy the program or too morally bankrupt to watch it with children in the house. A la carte programming, or pay per view programming would be a tremendous option for us if the costs were not prohibitive. I believe in the free market. I think programming providers should be required to let the public determine whether or not their channels are carried or cut.
